

KATHY HJERESON was born in Port Angeles, Washington, a beautiful community nestled between mountains and straits. She is one of nine children of which eight are girls and one a boy. Her parents were true environmentalists who loved the outdoors. They went hiking, fossil hunting, tide pool viewing, beach combing and cleaning. She grew up with a passion for nature that turned into a passion for art and design.

She has painted, quilted, stenciled, made stained glass as well as many other forms of art. But, jewelry is where she feels connected.

She moved to New Mexico in 1985. At that time she wanted to find a way to work and still be available to her children. Jewelry design started as a hobby and then became a way of gift giving. So many people complimented her, she decided to start designing.

She loves what she does and tries to put love into each piece she makes.
